In This Issue

The fourth issue of Signal features a special focus on the theme of "Resistance." The issue includes essays on the history of political graphics, the use of graphic design in social movements, and the power of art to resist oppression.

The issue also includes interviews with leading political graphic artists, such as Shepard Fairey, Emory Douglas, and Barbara Kruger. These interviews provide insights into the artists' creative process and their commitment to using their work to make a difference in the world.
