Early Life and Military Career

Manfred von Richthofen was born in Germany in 1892. He joined the German army in 1915 and was initially assigned to a cavalry regiment. However, he quickly transferred to the newly formed air service, where he found his true calling.

Richthofen's early combat experiences were unremarkable. He flew several reconnaissance missions and participated in a few skirmishes, but he failed to score any victories. However, his fortunes changed in 1917 when he was assigned to Jagdgeschwader 1 (JG 1), the most successful fighter squadron in the German air force.

The Red Baron Is Born

It was with JG 1 that Richthofen truly made his mark. He quickly became one of the squadron's top pilots, and his victory total began to climb steadily. In January 1918, he painted his Fokker Dr.1 triplane red, a move that earned him the nickname "The Red Baron."

The Red Baron's reputation grew with each victory. He became a propaganda hero for Germany, and his face was plastered on posters and newspapers throughout the country. He was even awarded the Pour le Mérite, Germany's highest military decoration.

The Downfall of the Red Baron

Richthofen's reign of terror came to an end on April 21, 1918. While engaged in combat with a group of British aircraft, his plane was shot down by Canadian pilot Arthur Roy Brown. Richthofen was killed instantly, at the age of 25.

Legacy

The Red Baron's death was a major blow to the German war effort. He was one of the most experienced and successful fighter pilots in the world, and his loss was deeply felt by his comrades.

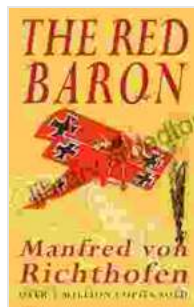

In the years since his death, the Red Baron has become a legendary figure. He is remembered as one of the greatest fighter pilots of all time, and his name remains synonymous with aerial combat.
