CANDLE Safety Tips

Candle users should always use caution, especially in cold temperatures and during power failures. An estimated 20% of candle fires involving fatalities occur concurrently with a loss of electrical power. While flashlights and battery-powered lamps are safe sources of light during lengthy power outages, candles are also considered reliable alternatives—if used safely. Follow these helpful tips to keeping your home safe, and find even more tips at www.candle.org.

Place lit candles on heat-resistant surfaces so they don't melt into another surface or topple over.

Never leave a candle on or near anything that can catch fire. Keep burning candles away from furniture, drapes, bedding, carpets, books, paper, flammable decorations, electronics, etc.

Never leave burning candles unattended. Extinguish them when leaving a room.

Keep candles well out of the reach of children and pets.

Place candles on a stable surface in a fire-resistant holder at least 12 inches away from anything flammable, including holiday decorations.

Use a candle snuffer. Use your hand, but hold the flame back, blowing it out or snuffing the flame with a candle snuffer. Sparks or embers, if blown from the candle, could ignite combustible materials nearby.

Consider using pillar or broom-based candles. During a power outage, as they're less likely to be accidentally knocked over. When possible, use low candles with glass globes to prevent burns or fires.
