The Three Essays

The book consists of three essays, each of which explores a different aspect of Indian art and architecture:

1. Indian Architecture: Its Psychology, Structure, and History

This essay examines the fundamental principles underlying Indian architecture, from its structural ingenuity to the symbolic and psychological significance of its various elements. Coomaraswamy argues that Indian architecture is not merely a utilitarian endeavor but a profound expression of spiritual and cultural values.

2. The Dance of Shiva

This essay focuses on the iconic representation of Shiva, the Hindu god of dance. Coomaraswamy interprets the dance as a cosmic metaphor, symbolizing the dynamic rhythm and interconnectedness of all life. He explores the historical and cultural significance of the dance, as well as its artistic representation.

3. The Arts and Crafts of India and Ceylon

This essay is a comprehensive survey of the diverse arts and crafts of India and Ceylon (present-day Sri Lanka). Coomaraswamy examines the techniques, materials, and symbolism of various art forms, including textiles, metalwork, ceramics, and woodcarving. He highlights the unique contributions of Indian artisans and their role in the development of international artistic styles.
